

Project and Achievement

Project and achievement section in resume is an opportunity to shine a spotlight on your accomplishments, practical skills, problem solving skills and our creativity. It adds a dimension of depth by demonstrating how we have applied our skills to solve real-world problems.

Right Structure for resume's project section

1. Project Name :

- Project name should be simple yet explanatory, the recruiter must be able to know the project and the things we have done in that project, from the project name.

2. Description :

- Provide a concise overview of the project, including its purpose, scope, and the team we worked with.
- Describe the challenges we have faced in that project, frame it in a concise yet impactful way.

3. Role and responsibility :

- Add the role or contribution we had in the respective project. For example, if it was a team project or we do it individually.
- If applicable, mention any specific technologies, software, or tools we utilized for the project.

Break myths about project section and make it standout

- People think only big projects matter, but it completely depends on how we learn from that project and the impact that it creates.
- Lack of professional experience does not imply a shortage of projects. Demonstrating a portfolio of projects showcases our innovation, curiosity about new technologies, and our ability to effectively work with them.
- In order to standout, make sure we have diverse range of projects which shows our versatility and adaptability.
- Try to add numbers and matrix in our description to make it impactful.

- Tailor our project list to the job you're applying for. Highlight projects that are most relevant to the role or industry.
