

Difference between CV, Cover Letter & Resume Diff

In the job market, terms like CV, cover letter, and resume are commonly used, but they have specific roles in the application process. Knowing the difference between each document is really crucial in presenting your professional background and qualifications to potential employers.

1. Curriculum Vitae

- A Curriculum Vitae is a more comprehensive document that provides an overview of academic and professional documents.
- It includes detailed information about your education, research, publications, awards, and other accomplishments.
- CV is basically used when you are applying in academia, research, and certain specialized fields where an exhaustive record of qualifications is expected.
- It is not limited by length and can span multiple pages.

2. Cover Letter

- Cover Letter is more like a detailed explanation or personalized document that accompanies our resume or CV when applying for a job.
- A cover letter should be tailored to the job and company, demonstrating how your skills and experience make us a strong fit.
- It provides an opportunity to showcase your communication skills and explain how our background aligns with the company's needs.

3. Resume

- A resume, on the other hand, is a concise and targeted document that highlights our relevant skills, experience, and qualifications for a specific job.
- Unlike CV, resume is limited to one or two pages.
- Resumes are widely used in the corporate world and are an essential tool for job seekers across various industries.
